Hello, everyone!

Are you writing right now?

Floppy was not well. He lay on his bed. "He looks bad," said Kipper. Biff wanted Floppy to get well, too. Mum took Floppy to the vet. There were six cats at the vet. Floppy just looked at the cats. He was not well. The vet looked at Floppy. "Give him some pills," she said. Mum took Floppy home. Floppy was soon better.

Classic Floppy!

Okay, guys, see you next time!

Hey, guys! How's it going?

So, last time Luke and his friends won the big battle against the Galactic Empire and destroyed the Death Star. So, let's finish our exciting story now:

Luke Skywalker and his friends are heroes. Princess Leia gives them medals and the Rebels cheer. Their fight with Darth Vader and the Empire is far from over, but they know that the Force will be with them, always.

So, yes... maybe Darth Vader is still out there somewhere. Hmm, the story continues...

Join me next time, okay? Bye, guys!

Hey, guys! How are you doing?

Hope you're all still staying healthy and observing proper social distancing guidelines.

There doesn't seem to be as much news about the coronavirus pandemic in Tokyo these days, and the situation does seem to be getting a little better, but just because people aren't talking about it [that] doesn't mean that it's all gone away. Especially not in other countries, which still can affect us here. For example:

Kei Nishikori revealed August 16th that he has tested positive for the novel coronavirus, with the news coming two weeks before the U.S. Open, where he had his most successful Grand Slam performance in 2014 with a runner-up finish. "Hi everyone, I have some unfortunate news today. This morning while still in Florida, I got tested for COVID-19 and tested positive," Nishikori said in a statement on his official app, adding, "I am feeling well and have very mild symptoms." The 30-year-old said he was self-isolating in Florida.

Ah, yes... Florida. That [place] is particularly bad for the coronavirus, but I'm pretty sure Kei Nishikori will be fine. I just hope that he didn't unknowingly pass it on to any more vulnerable people before he got tested. As for all of us here, I guess all we can do is keep staying safe and studying hard and... I'll see you soon
