Hey, guys! How's it going?
Now, a little while ago, we finished our epic three-part space adventure story. But I think it might now be time to go back to the very beginning. Join me:

A long time ago in a galaxy far, far away... The peaceful planet of Naboo is under a blockade from the greedy Trade Federation. The Galactic Republic quickly sends Qui-Gon Jinn and Obi-Wan Kenobi to help. They are Jedi Knights – guardians of justice, and masters of the Force. But when Qui-Gon and Obi-Wan arrive, they are attacked by battle droids. The Jedi defend themselves but they are outnumbered and must flee the Trade Federation battleship.

Oh-ho-ho! So, sounds pretty exciting! Join me next time for our new space adventure!
Bye, guys.

Hey guys, how're you doing?

Hope you're all still staying healthy and safe.

Now, as you know, I am from the UK and one of the things the UK is most famous for is football. (Or, "soccer".) But that doesn't mean that every team in the UK is some massive, world-renowned club like Manchester United, and for one of those lesser-renowned teams, this is some pretty surprising but exciting news. Take a listen:

Hollywood stars Ryan Reynolds and Rob McElhenney bought one of the world's oldest soccer teams on November 16th and plan to document their first foray into the sport in a fly-on-the-wall TV show. In a pinch-yourself moment for success-starved fans of Welsh club Wrexham, Reynolds and McElhenney completed a 2.5 million dollar takeover of a team that plays in the fifth tier of the English game. "This is really happening," Reynolds, a Canadian-born actor best known for his portrayal of Deadpool (and Detective Pikachu), said at the end of a short video announcing the purchase of the 156-year-old club. To increase the exposure of a club that has been outside English soccer's four main pro leagues since 2008, the new owners are ready to use Wrexham in a behind-the-scenes TV series.

Ah! Well, I wonder how this TV show will turn out, and I wonder whether this will end up being a good investment for these two popular actors. What do you think? Let me know, okay?

Alright, guys, well, until next time – and as always – study hard, stay safe, and I'll see you soon.
