Anda: Tim! Your hair is so long.

Tim: Mm, yeah. I wanted to get it cut this weekend, but I don't think it's a good idea to go to a salon at the moment.

Anda: Yeah, because of social distancing.

Tim: That's right. A lot of people are cutting their own hair these days, so maybe I should try that too!

Anda: Yeah, maybe you should! I mean, it can't get any worse...

Dictation Contest (PR1, 中級) No. 33

Anda: Tim, your hair is getting pretty long. When was the last time you got it cut?

Tim: Oh, quite a while ago, I guess. I want to cut it again soon but I haven't been able to recently because of the coronavirus situation. I think some hairdressers and barbers are still open, but going to get my hair cut probably isn't the best way to practice social distancing. I might have to try cutting it myself!

Anda: Wait... so, you didn't cut it yourself last time?

Tim: No...

Anda: Hold on... you're telling me a professional did that?!

Tim: Yeah...

Anda: Well, maybe you should get your money back.

Hey, guys! How's it going?

Now, I know a lot of you like watching action movies and so many of you probably know who Tom Cruise is. He is famous for doing a lot of his own stunts and for trying crazier and crazier things on film every time he does a movie. But listen to this:

Tom Cruise will film his next Hollywood blockbuster on location – 400km up in the air and orbiting the Earth once every 90 minutes. The Top Gun star will fly through the stratosphere to shoot an as-yet-unknown film aboard the International Space Station, NASA said on May 5th. Cruise, 56, famously still does his own cliff-hanging, car-rolling stunts. If his latest daring project goes ahead, Cruise will be the first Hollywood A-lister to appear on-screen from outside the planet's atmosphere. Deadline Hollywood reported it was not part of his box office hit franchise Mission: Impossible. The seventh film in that series is set to hit screens next year after production was delayed by the coronavirus pandemic.

So, he's going to film an action movie in space! That's bonkers!

Hah, let me know what you think and I'll see you next time. OK?

Stay safe, guys.
