

Dictation Contest (PRJr, 初級) No. 51

Hello everyone, this is Bina. Today we are going to read something from Eiken4, the exam. For our PR.Jr dictation contest. So get your pen and paper. Are you ready?

Hi Katherine, Can you help me? Today is your dad's birthday. I forgot about it. Please make some chocolate cookies after you come home. After work, I'll buy some steaks at the Super market to cook for dinner.

Dictation Contest (PR1, 中級) No. 51

Hey everyone, this is another PR 1 dictation video. Today we will use the Eiken pre level 2 textbook. Let's see if you guys can understand.

Yesterday William and his wife decided to eat dinner at a new Italian restaurant in their town. William had lasagna and his wife ate pizza. The food was good and the staff members were very nice, so William and his wife wanted to tell other people about it. After they got home last night, they wrote a good review of the restaurant online. That makes me really hungry. I'll see you guys in the next video. Bye guys.

Dictation Contest (PR2 上級) No. 51

Hello everyone. This is Bina and for today's PR2 dictation contest we are gonna be reading from the Aoyama Gakuin University's entrance exam. Are you ready?

Yet until relatively recently this logic would have seemed odd, or at least novel. In the nineteenth century, when public monuments became commonplace, disaster monuments were essentially unknown. Public monuments did not commemorate victims. If victimization is a state of powerlessness, "when action is of no avail" monuments celebrated its very opposite. They reaffirmed, over and again, the beneficial presence of human agency in society. They told the stories of men who acted decisively upon their world, by transforming it for the better or saving it from peril.

Good job everyone, see you next time.
