

Dictation Contest (PRJr, 初級) No. 678

Hello, Everyone! Welcome back to PR Junior!

Today, you are going to listen to Sam's future dream! Let's begin!

"I want to be a scientist. I'm going to study math and science really hard. One day, I want to make a rocket because I saw a movie about rocket-making last year, and it was very interesting."
Joy was excited about Sam's dream.

That's all for today! See you next time! Have a nice day!

Dictation Contest (PR 1, 中級) No. 678

Hello, everyone. Welcome back to PR1.

Do you believe that dreams predict the future?

Many people can remember a time when they saw an event, place or person in their dream and then, later, the dream came true in real life. But it's probably just a coincidence when a dream event is followed by a real-life event that's similar to it, especially if the subject of the dream is something that happens often in everyday life. Some scientists say that dreams are related to our unconsciousness. However, other people say the brain organizes memories and events from the day. Dreams are just a random collection of these thoughts, but we try to make a story from them when we wake up.

That's all for today. See you next time!

Dictation Contest (PR2 上級) No. 678

Hi, everyone! Welcome back to PR2.

Today, I'm going to read the second half of an article about "The government's attempt to provide equal access to education". Let's start.

By the 1970s, American Society strongly committed to pushing affirmative action. For future students, this meant that schools gave priority to blacks, Native Americans, women and other groups who had formerly been shut out from more prestigious professions, helping members of these groups reach unprecedented levels of social and financial success.

More recently, those who have found themselves excluded from universities as a result of affirmative action have complained the policy is unfair to them, claiming they are victims of reverse discrimination. Some believe affirmative action had served its purpose, and could be phased out. Others believed that beneficiaries of affirmative action should be limited to certain groups, such as the descendants of slaves. Americans continue to debate the issue. As of 2013, eight states in the United States [have banned] affirmative action in their state university admission policies.

It can be seen that people who were discriminated in the past getting supported more can cause another problem, which is a reverse discrimination. The government needs to put [in a lot of effort] to satisfy all people and promote the real equality.

That is all for today. See you next time!
