Tomohiro: Hey Kaho, what are you going to do this weekend?

Kaho: I don't have plans. What about you?

Tomohiro: I'm going to go to a party. Do you want to come?

Kaho: Oh yeah, that sounds great. Thanks or inviting me.

Tim: Hi guys. What are you guys talking about?

Tomohiro & Kaho: Nothing,

Tomohiro: So what are you up to this weekend, Kaho?

Kaho: I don't have any plans. What about you?

Tomohiro: I'm going to go to a music festival in Yoyogi Park on Sunday.

Kaho: Oh that sounds cool.

Tomohiro: Do you want to come with me?

Kaho: Yeah, that would be great. Thanks.

Tomohiro: So, let's meet at Harajuku station at 12:30.

Kaho: Ok. Sounds good. I'm looking forward to it.

Tomohiro: Yeah, it'll be really fun.

Tim: Hi guys. What are you talking about?

Tomohiro & Kaho: Nothing.

Tim: So what are you up to this weekend? Do you want to hang out, maybe?

Kaho: Sorry, I can't. I'm busy.

Tomohiro: Oh, yeah, me too. I think I have a thing.

Tim: Ok, never mind, maybe next time.

Bina: Oh, have you got another article you wanna read to me? That's great let`s hear it

Tim: Pet owners in Japan annually fork out an average of about 300,000yen for a dog and an average of 160,000yen for a cat, according to a survey released March 31.

Bina: Wow

Tim: Anicom Insurance Inc., which provides insurance policies for pets, released the results of an annual survey carried out with its clients.

According to the survey, the top spending item for both animals was food at about 50,000yen, followed by insurance fees of roughly 50,000 yen for a dog and about 30,000 yen for a cat, while medical fees came in at around 45,000yen and 24,000 yen respectively.

Bina: Wow, that was very interesting. Thank you. Actually that reminds me, I also had something that I wanted to read to you Tim: Oh, cool! What is it?

Bina: Now, where was it...Um...well actually, let me just start from the beginning. Mary Ellen Contents, Chapter 1: The Food Service Industry
