

Dictation Contest (PRJr, 初級) No. 76

Hello, everyone!

Time for another fun listening challenge. Try to write down everything I say, okay?

Mum and Kipper went shopping. Kipper got the trolley. Mum put cans in the trolley. She put bags in the trolley. Kipper put a big egg in the trolley. Mum did not see the big egg. Mum saw the big egg. Kipper had to put the egg back.

Oh, poor Kipper! In England, a 'trolley' is a shopping cart.

Okay, guys, see you next time!

Hey, guys! How's it going?

For today's PR1 dictation video, I want to continue reading to you the greatest story ever told, which I think some of you might have recognized by now...

R2-D2 and C-3PO land on the desert planet Tatooine. They are captured by tiny scavengers called Jawas. The droids are quickly sold to a farmer and his young nephew, Luke Skywalker. An orphan, Luke dreams of leaving his desert home and traveling into space on exciting adventures.

Ooh. Do you think he will get to have these adventures? I guess we'll see!

Okay, guys, I'll see you next time, alright? Bye!

Dictation Contest (PR2 上級) No. 76

Hey, guys! How are you doing?

Hope you're all still staying healthy and safe. And, again, I hope you're doing your best to enjoy yourselves on these sad, rainy days. Well, I found a fairly interesting news story here, so listen to this:

A bright meteor crossed the sky above Tokyo early July 2nd, with many people saying they heard it explode. Social media came alive after the 2:30am sightings, with many people saying they heard a large bang. Some said they mistook the sound for noise made by neighbours. "I thought a person (living in the condo) above knocked down a shelf," wrote one Twitter user, while another said, "I thought my child sleeping on the second floor fell out of bed." Other[s] witnessed the sky suddenly light up.

Ooh, what about you? Did you hear this meteor explode into our atmosphere? Or see it streak across the night sky? I did! It flew right over my house! ...I'm just kidding. But that would have been really cool, right?

Alright, guys, as always, study hard, stay safe, and I'll see you soon.
