Hello everyone! Are you listening carefully and writing? Here we go.

It was foggy. Dad wanted to go shopping. "Oh no," said the children. They got into the car. The fog got worse. Dad couldn't see. Dad stopped the car. They had to walk home. The fog got worse. They were lost. They saw a light. "A monster!" said dad. "It's mom!" said the children.

Okay guys, see you next time!

Hey guys how's it going? Let's see what happens next in our space adventure.

Disguised as stormtroopers, Luke and Han handcuff Chewbacca and pretend he is a prisoner. They enter the detention center and take the guards by surprise. Luke quickly finds Princess Leia, and opens her cell. "I'm here to rescue you!" Luke says, taking off his helmet, which is after Leia says to him, "Aren't you a little short for a stormtrooper?"

Okay guys, join me next time, See you!

Hey guys, how are you doing? Hope you're all still staying healthy and safe. As the number of new coronavirus cases gets higher and higher each week, it's really important to keep practicing social distancing. One of the best ways you can stay safe is to avoid public transport. And one of the ways you can avoid public transport is to ride your bicycle. Listen to this:

About 1 in 4 people who cycle to work in Tokyo began commuting by bicycle in order to avoid crowds during the novel coronavirus pandemic, a recent survey found. A total of 23.0% of 500 businesspeople in Tokyo who cycle to work at least once a week said they started commuting by bicycle "after the novel coronavirus began to spread," according to the online survey conducted in June by insurer Au Insurance Co.

In a multiple-choice question, 95.7% of those who started cycling to work said they did so "to avoid using public transport."

Hmm, there you go it seems like a good idea. I actually don't have a bicycle and I would consider getting one, but I don't really live close enough to anywhere that I would regularly go, including here. And even if I did start cycling here, I think it's a little bit too hot to try that at the moment.

Alright guys, as always, study hard, stay safe and I'll see you soon.
