Hey, guys!

Let's read another funny story together:

Dad got a big spade. "Let me dig a hole." he said. Dad dug a hole. The children helped. The hole got bigger and deeper. All the children came. They played in the hole. The water came in. "I can't stop it!" said Dad. Dad's spade was in the hole. The next day, the hole had gone. Dad's spade was under the sand. "Let's dig!" said Dad.

Okay, guys, see you next time!

Hey, guys! How's it going?

Let's see what's in store next for our space heroes:

After turning off the tractor beam, Obi-Wan confronts his old enemy, Darth Vader. They ignite their lightsabers and the duel begins. As Luke runs to the Millennium Falcon, he sees the battle just as Vader strikes down Obi-Wan. The old man vanishes and his cloak falls to the floor. "Nooo!" cries Luke.

Oh, no. So, Obi-Wan Kenobi was defeated. He's gone! It's so sad.

Well, join me next time, guys! See you!

Hey, guys! How're you doing?

Hope you're all still acting cautiously and responsibly.

Now, we've looked at a few news stories about space, whether it's people leaving the earth to go up there, or about little bits of space coming down here. But here's a news story that has some bearing on the future of space exploration. Listen to this:

U.S. astronauts Bob Behnken and Doug Hurley, who flew to the International Space Station in SpaceX's new Crew Dragon, splashed down in the capsule in the Gulf of Mexico on August 2nd after a two-month voyage that was NASA's first crewed mission from home soil in nine years. The two astronauts aboard Crew Dragon "Endeavour" undocked from the station August 1st and returned home to land in the waves off Florida's Pensacola coast. The successful splashdown was a final key test of whether Elon Musk's spacecraft can transport astronauts to and from orbit.

Hmm, so, I wonder whether Elon Musk's SpaceX will really be the future of space science. What do you think?

Alright, guys, I'll see you next time. And in the meantime, and as always, study hard, stay safe, and I'll see you soon.
